

Queen Amazed by Glenfern Valley Bushlands

The Queen dropped by the Glenfern Valley Bushlands when she visited Australia. She was amazed because of what she saw. Last time she visited it was a Quarry with broken cars, cans and other rubbish covered the area. Now it's a wonderful place which has indigenous plants and animals. It's now protected by the government from rubbish and F.G.V.B (friends of Glenfern Valley Bushlands) made fences and grow plants. The F.G.V.B has saved 100 Acres of land from being a dump.

The Queen asked to help F.G.V.B why they volunteered to change the land the members of F.G.V.B replied it was horrible to live near a quarry and a dump. The Queen went walking down the track when the president and his wife Mr Moncrieff and Mrs Moncrieff gave the queen a tour. She was amazed by the differences. She saw a nest of powerful owls and other wild life. She saw over 200 indigenous species of plants and she even saw a Rufus fantail, which she loved.

The Queen sat down after her tour and had a picnic with F.G.V.B and she interviewed Mrs and Mr Moncrieff. She asked what they do and Mr Moncrieff replied we kill pittosporums, indentifying weeds and plants as well as taking school tours.

Then the Queen asked what your goal is for the next 10 years. They replied to make this a recreational area and to learn more about flora and fauna.

The queen now had to say good bye as she got in her car to go to the airport.
